Biography

Anthony Fatato's artwork thrives on cultural diversity, so it is fitting that he has started his career in New York City. In a world often defined by cultural division, New York is one of those rare places that symbolize unity by fostering diversity. Everyone is a minority in New York... walk ten blocks and you might hear ten different languages, none of which seems more foreign than the next, including English.

Training his senses toward both classical and impressionistic styles, Anthony seeks to create artworks that show the story of converging cultures and the formation of new ones.

In 1998 Anthony received a Bachelor's Degree in Fine Arts from the School of Visual Arts in New York City. Currently, he studies under Frank Mason at the Art Student's League in Manhattan. Since the late 1990's, Anthony has had studio spaces in Brooklyn, Manhattan, Jersey City, and Yonkers, just north of the city. He recently began working from a studio in historic Redhook, Brooklyn.
